MR. LLOYD GEORGE AS FINANCE MINISTER AND DEALER IN MARCONI SHARES—HIS INVECTIVE—SOME OF HIS SOCIAL, POLITICAL AND REVOLUTIONARY EXPLOITS.

(Copyright, 1913, by G. W. Smalley.)

London, June 25.

Mr. Lloyd George stands in a different category from Sir Rufus Isaacs, and his speech was in a different tone. Here, perhaps, comes in the question of race. The Jews are a conciliatory people. They have preserved that attitude here in England, where they are no longer under political and civil disabilities, nor even social. They stand on a level with all other races. New York, which has a social standard of its own, and for the most part outlaws the race, which supplied Christendom with its Christ, must not be able to comprehend this, but so it is. Sir Rufus Isaacs, like other Jews of distinction, has profited by the removal of the old ban, yet still prefers peace to war. Mr. Lloyd George's veins flow fast and fiercely the untempered Welsh blood which waxes of that little Welsh principality the most turbulent part of the Kingdom. It races through his career and through the passionate protest of last Wednesday in the House.

Different also is Mr. Lloyd George's official position. He is Chancellor of the Exchequer, a post which answers to our Secretary of the Treasury. If there be a man in the Government bound beyond all others to take heed to his steps in every transaction of money or business, it is he. He is, or ought to be, the Caesar's wife of the Cabinet; above not only wrongdoings but above the suspicion of wrongdoing. Yet in this matter of Marconi shares he has been both suspected and publicly accused of corruption. Of corruption he was innocent, but of indiscretion, in his case peculiarly grave, he cannot be acquitted. He confesses it. He says now that though his speculation, which he calls an investment, in American Marconi shares was not wrong in itself, he would not, had he known what was to happen, have touched it, "because it would have lent itself to misconception and perhaps to general misapprehension." It is the consequence, not the character, of the transaction, of which he repents. He seems still to think there was no real harm in buying and selling shares of an American company allied to a British company then negotiating with the British Government for a contract, "he being the chief financial officer of that Government."

Of these charges of corruption Mr. Lloyd George complains bitterly and to a great extent rightly, though not in the right way. He poses before the House as a kind of martyr. He has complained more than once in public that no man of his time has been so much abused as he. Has any man of his time abused other men as much as he? Is there to be no reciprocity? Has Mr. Lloyd George a patent of alimony? He has abused classes and individual members of those classes. Is Limehouse forgotten? Is Newcastle forgotten? Mr. Lloyd George's friends plead that he was sincere, it is not necessary to question his sincerity, but what was at the bottom of it? A passionate sympathy, if you like, with certain classes, the poorer classes, of the people of this country, but also a passionate hatred of the upper classes. It is true of him as it was true of Parnell that hatred was the driving force in his policy. What was the Budget of 1909 but an attempt to transfer burdens of taxation from one class to another? It was more than that. It was a step toward confiscation. It enacted, in effect, a penalty for the crime of owning land. I will call but one witness to prove it and the witness shall be Mr. Lloyd George. While he was attacking landlords in his Newcastle harangue, a man in the audience cried out:

"Tax them out of existence!" Mr. George paused, a sinister smile spread over his face, and he answered: "Well, I have made a beginning."

Upon the unhappy owners of land whom he sought to penalize he also poured contempt. Discussing primogeniture, he asked what claim had the eldest son except that he was "the first of the litter?" They tell you that in private Mr. Lloyd George is a pleasant companion, or even that he has over men, and perhaps over women, a power of fascination. It may be so. At a time when a great part of society amused itself by ostracizing Mr. Winston Churchill because he had rattled from Conservative to Radical, Mr. Lloyd George was taken up, invited out, asked to week-ends at great houses. It was an illustration of the mood in which society wishes for nothing better than to be amused; and amused it was. A place was made for this new Court Jester; and he filled it to the contentment of his hosts and hostesses. In one case, at least, he required this hospitality by language which led to an open quarrel; and the letter in which the Duke of Marlborough resented Mr. George's attack was not one which he found it convenient to answer. But upon this part of his career I make no comment. There is an anecdote which of itself may pass for comment. There seems to have been a time when the Chancellor himself was capable of taking a humorous view of his social position. Something was said about the place of the gentleman in public life. Mr. Lloyd George is reported to have said:

"What you want in public life is a man of business. Look at Lord X, and look at me. We are both good men of business and neither of us is a gentleman."

But perhaps that also was a humorous view. There are certain standards of conduct which, whatever you call them, have hitherto been the standards of English public life. One of them is to make good a challenge if the challenge you fling down is taken up. Mr. Kebley-Fletcher from across the floor in the House of Commons asked Mr. George a question which contained a stinging innuendo. The Chancellor, at a white heat, defied him to repeat it where he was not protected by privilege as in

(By Cable to The Tribune.)

London, July 26.—Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills have taken a short lease of Theobalds Park from Sir Hedworth and Lady Meux, and will soon be joined by their daughter, Mrs. Henry Carnegie Phipps, and her son.

Mrs. George Cavendish-Bentinck, only sister of Mrs. Mills; Mrs. Walter Burns and Lord and Lady Granard and their two little girls will be among their guests next month.

MISS HELEN SEARS WEDDED

Becomes the Bride of James D. C. Bradley, of Boston.

(By Telegram to The Tribune.)

Boston, July 26.—Miss Helen Sears, only daughter of Mrs. J. Montgomery Sears, of Boston, became the bride of James D. C. Bradley, a Boston business man, late this afternoon in St. Mark's Episcopal Church, Southboro. Only members of the families were present, and Miss Sears was unattended. The best man was Dr. Reginald Fitz, of Boston.

Bishop Brent, who recently returned from the Philippine Islands, performed the ceremony, and Wallace Goodrich was at the organ. The bride wore a white lace gown. Following the ceremony there was a reception at Wolfpen Farm, Southboro, the country home of the Sears family.

The bride is a member of the Vincent, Chilton, Country and New Riding clubs, of Boston, and the Colony Club, of New York. Mr. Bradley, who was graduated from Harvard University in 1906, is a member of the Harvard clubs of Boston and New York.

COOKMAN—CRAMP.

(By Telegram to The Tribune.)

Philadelphia, July 26.—The marriage of Miss Helen Cramp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Courtland D. Cramp, and Wharton Griffiths Cookman was solemnized today in Holy Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church, the Rev. Dr. H. C. Stone, minister of the church, officiating. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was accompanied by Henry P. Cookman, a brother of the bridegroom, was the best man.

AN ENGAGEMENT.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Peters, of Garden City, Long Island, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Pauline, to George W. Pierpont, of this city. Miss Peters is well known in the younger set on Long Island and in New York. Her sister, Miss Eleanor Hartshorn Peters, was married to Argyle Ross Parsons, of Garden City, in February, 1912. Mr. Peters is president of the Long Island Railroad.

Mr. Pierpont is the son of the late Henry V. Pierpont, of Chicago, and lives at the Harvard Club in this city. No date has been set for the wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. P. S. Carter gave a children's party on the lawn at the Pinar cottage today, and the luncheon entertainers included Mrs. Oliver Gould Jenkins at her summer home, and Mrs. Preston P. Satterwhite, on the steam yacht Isis.

Rear Admiral Cameron McR. Winslow gave a stag dinner aboard the battleship Arkansas to-night and Captain Marbury Johnson was a dinner entertainer on the battleship Georgia.

Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Valentine, of Chicago, who returned on the steam yacht Owa during the day, gave a dinner aboard to-night. The yacht goes to drydock early in the week.

Among those who registered at the Casino during the day were Mr. and Mrs. Purroy Mitchell, of New York, guests of Mr. and Mrs. Norman B. R. Whitehouse, and F. Herzog, R. K. Waterbury, and Carl E. von Kirmann, of New York.

Cruger, guest of Norman Whitehouse, John Clinton Gray, Jr., and Mrs. F. H. Doyle.

Regarding the dancing of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, who comes here next week in the Olympic, Mr. Hammerstein waxed enthusiastic. "She is great," he said. "Her act with Jack Clifford is a great success abroad. When she dances here she will prove that her name has little to do with her foreign success, and that she has won her praise abroad by hard work and natural ability."

Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones and John Clinton Gray, Jr., of New York, spent today here. They arrived early on the steam yacht Narada and left here again this evening. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have not as yet set the date for opening their home at Wood.

Count J. H. von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, returned today from his visit in Brooklyn, Mass.

Miss Marian Darlington has arrived to visit with Mrs. James H. Darlington, at The Corners.

FAIRY DELIGHTS NEWPORT

Norwegian Dancer Surprises Guests of Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish.

(By Telegram to The Tribune.)

Newport, July 26.—All other days of the present season were eclipsed today in the matter of entertaining, and the week ended with a round of social gaiety.

The chief affair of the night was the dinner dance given by Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish at Crossways. Eight large tables were required for the seating of the guests.

Three of these were placed on the enclosed veranda and five in the dining room. The dining room tables were decorated with pink and the tables on the veranda in white. Pink flowers were hung from the ceiling in chandelier effect, with tiny electric lights, and there was also a profusion of other floral decorations and electric lights outside of the house.

A feature of the evening was the dancing of Miss Inga Sontum, of Norway. Her solo dances came as a surprise to the guests, who went first to the French garden, which was prettily decorated with lamps and bathed by artificial moonlight created by a powerful spotlight placed under the roof of the ballroom. The orchestra on the lawn played a fairy dance, and Miss Sontum appeared in a number of costumes, including an immense silver scarf. In Pierrot costume later she danced the bolero and afterward in Hungarian costume she gave the Czardas and a court dance. The Casino orchestra played during the dinner and for the general dancing.

Mrs. Hamilton McK. Twombly, who starts on Tuesday with her daughter for her long trip in the Orient, gave her farewell dinner at Vineland to-night.

Miss Edith Deacon was guest of honor at a dinner party given by Mrs. R. Livingston Beckman at Land's End.

Mrs. Marsden J. Perry was also a dinner entertainer in honor of her guests. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Vanderbilt and Lyman Gage, of New York, who with Mr. and Mrs. Perry, were guests at a luncheon given at the Naval Training Station by Captain and Mrs. Roger Welles.

Mrs. William E. Carter gave a children's party on the lawn at the Pinar cottage today, and the luncheon entertainers included Mrs. Oliver Gould Jenkins at her summer home, and Mrs. Preston P. Satterwhite, on the steam yacht Isis.

Rear Admiral Cameron McR. Winslow gave a stag dinner aboard the battleship Arkansas to-night and Captain Marbury Johnson was a dinner entertainer on the battleship Georgia.

Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Valentine, of Chicago, who returned on the steam yacht Owa during the day, gave a dinner aboard to-night. The yacht goes to drydock early in the week.

MISS HELEN F. EUSTIS SAILS

MRS. STICKNEY'S PRINCE

Her Husband Descended from King Charles X of France.

(Copyright, 1913, by the Brentwood Company.)

Through her marriage to Prince Aymon de Faucigny-Lucinge in Westminster Cathedral early in the month Mrs. Joseph Stickney, of No. 574 Fifth avenue, New York, and owner of the Mount Washington Hotel in the White Mountains, has established a sort of French handed relationship to the royal French House of Bourbon, for Prince Aymon is a great-grandson of the royal Duc de Berry, and a great-great-grandson, therefore, of King Charles X of France.

When the Duc de Berry was murdered by Louis, at the Paris Opera, in February, 1820, he confided just before he expired the two daughters born to him of his union with Amy Brown to his uncle, Louis VIII, and to his father, after Charles X, King Louis XVIII, settled handsome fortunes upon his girls, creating Charlotte Countess of Tessaud in her own right and bestowing the title of Countess de Vieux upon Louise. They were respectively thirteen and fourteen years old when their father was killed, and although the ecclesiastical marriage which he had contracted during his exile in England with Amy Brown, daughter of a village rector there, was not regarded as valid by the French crown, owing to his failure to obtain the sanction thereto from his uncle, Louis XVIII, and from his father, yet the girls were brought up at court as relatives of the reigning house.

Louise, Countess de Vieux, married Baron Athanasius de Charette, father of General Baron de Charette, who played so gallant a part at the battle of Mentana, in 1867, and later in the war of 1870—a part worthy of his grandfather, that Charette who was the hero of the wars of the Vendée in the closing years of the eighteenth century. The countess's son, Antoine, instead of continuing himself with the illustrious and historic name of de Charette, and with the title of baron, so honorably borne by his father, grandfather and great-grandfather, assumed the title of marquis, on his marriage three years ago in New York to Miss Susan Henning, daughter of James W. Henning, of Louisville, Ky. Antoine de Charette is half American, his mother having been Miss Polk, of the well known Tennessee family of that name, which furnished to the United States its eleventh President.

Title of Sardinian Origin.

The Duc de Berry's other daughter, Charlotte, Countess of Tessaud, married Prince Ferdinand de Faucigny-Lucinge et Coligny, head of one of the oldest houses of the nobility of Savoy, his family tree showing many matrimonial alliances with the now reigning dynasty of Italy. The original name was Paul, which was Gallicized into Faucigny, and the name of Lucinge and also of Coligny, came to the family through marriage. The princely title is in reality a Sardinian one, and it was only in 1823 that King Charles X, for the sake of his granddaughter, consented to grant to her husband a patent authorizing the members of the house of Faucigny-Lucinge et Coligny to use their foreign honors in France.

Prince Aymon is a grandson of this union. He is fifty-one years old, a member of the Jockey Club, of the Union and of the Agricolle—that is to say, of the best three clubs in France. He has a home in Paris, in the Avenue Elisee Reclus, and the chateau of Chardonnay, in the Department of the Sarthe, is good looking, travelled, tall, speaks English perfectly, has never until now been married, and has managed to keep his name clear of those sensational scandals in which some of his cousins of the same family and name have from time to time been involved.

His bride is credited with the possession of a fortune of $100,000, which she inherited on the death, ten years ago, of her first husband, Joseph Stickney, of New York, one of the wealthiest coal barons of the United States. She gives her age as forty-five. At any rate, she does not look more. Her father was Reuben Hall Foster, a New York merchant.

Prince Married American.

This is not the only American matrimonial alliance of the Faucigny-Lucinge family. Aymon's cousin, Prince Guy de Faucigny-Lucinge, is married to Natica Terry, daughter of the late Antonio Terry, of New York, by his first marriage. His second wife, it may be remembered, was Sybil Sanderson. In spite of the very large fortune brought by Natica Terry to her husband, Guy de Faucigny-Lucinge is in a condition of almost perpetual litigation with his army of creditors. In fact, he is almost as extravagant as Boni de Castellane, one of whose brothers, Stanislas de Castellane, is married to another of the Terry heiresses.

The head
